Charlene have been steadily building Boston crowds for years, consistently captivating new people with their sound: distorted rock tunes, well-crafted and catchy, deeply rooted in an almost completely forgotten sound of blissful shoe-gazery. After six years of performing in public, the band only has one full-length album and rarely makes road trips. The footage of this concert was taken over a year ago and hasn't been broadcast yet due to the sound and visual limitations of the shoot. Steps were taken to try to compensate for that and we hope the result is enjoyable.
