Sons and Daughters make music that seems to be all about changing expectations: that these former Arab Strap touring members couldn't step out on their own; that all Glaswegian indie bands are either loud instrumental rock or twee; and even that they could create something original and fresh to offer. Luckily, they accomplish their mission regularly, especially with their often incendiary live show. The Eye caught up with them recently for a little Q&A, and a lot of awe in what they put out onstage.
